

Hill View Primary School
English Expectations and Guidance

2023-24 v1

Intent

At Hill View, we believe all children are writers and that writing is an important tool to support thinking and expression. We encourage a love of writing through offering an engaging and purposeful way of teaching writing as well as using strategies such as Talk 4 Writing to enable our children to feel empowered as writers.

Our aim is to provide opportunities for all children, from their individual starting points, to deepen their learning and to be able to apply the skills they have learnt across a range of contexts. Our ASCENT values allow for successful written outcomes that will be achieved through all staff delivering a clear, creative and challenging curriculum where the commitment to the writing process is at the centre.

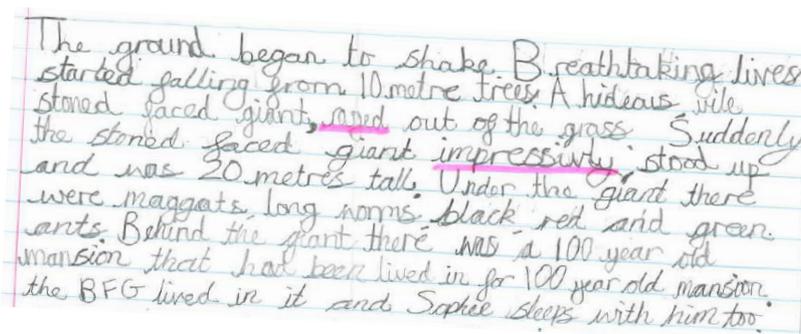

Through actively involving all learners in the writing process, all children will aspire to be successful in writing regardless of background, gender, race, class or individual need. Writing skills are taught through all areas of the curriculum, children will receive a variety of opportunities to show their excellence, creativity and understanding of the writing process within a community rooted in trust and nature.

A	Aspire	We instil in each pupil a desire to Aspire to constantly strive to improve and perfect writing to ensure that it fulfils its purpose and bridges the mind between the writer and the reader.
S	Success	We teach each pupil to have and enjoy success through mastering the various aspects required to successfully write. We adapt and scaffold to ensure every pupil can achieve success and that transcription does not become a barrier to the sharing of thinking, expression of ideas and feelings and the tool of writing. We recognise that technology from the pencil, to the pen, to the dictionary to the computer and AI are all tools that support pupil writing.
C	Community	We establish a community of writers in each class so that the tools, techniques, knowledge, skill and practice are performed in a supportive and challenging way. Learning to write is hard, the community is there to support each pupil on their journey.
E	Excellence	We model excellence in the written models provided by adults and in the expectations that we have for all pupils through our mastery approach, adapting and scaffolding where appropriate to ensure barriers to writing are addressed and minimised.
N	Nurture	We nurture our pupils writing through the provision of opportunities to make marks and talk, write and communicate. We use careful assessment and feedback to identify the key points for each individual pupil to work on to improve their skill.
T	Trust	We value the experiences, cultures and perspectives our pupils arrive at school with and believe that all pupils have the right to be taught tools that support their thinking and unlock their written expression and communication. We believe and trust in the unfolding development of each individual and match our expectations to provide appropriate provision and next steps.

Implementation

Our approach to teaching writing is to make sure that the writing curriculum is relevant, supports thinking and expression and enables pupils to develop and refine their skills including aspects that are of interest to them. At Hill View we strive to promote a love of writing through a number of ways which may include focussed learning from high quality rich texts, opportunities for free writing, and frequent chances to take part in competitions and to meet and share the expertise of known authors. Pupils learn to externalise their thinking, record and communicate their ideas and refine what has been written within the conventions of the purpose for which it is written across all aspects of the curriculum. Through analysis of authorial choices in texts and books they will have read and, as pupils master different aspects of writing, particularly transcriptional skills, they are taught to consider the impact and interpretation of what they have written upon their reader and audience so that they can come to try, apply and master these features in their own writing. By the end of their primary schooling they will have developed a repertoire of descriptive flourishes, effects and literary devices that inform choices about vocabulary, language and text structure, to ensure each writer has control of and can bridge between the mind of the writer and reader in a powerful, effective or inspiring way.

How we develop our writers

We understand that writing is an important tool to support and externalise thinking. We also seek to develop in our pupils an ability to communicate ideas, share understanding and enable knowledge and information to be transformed for a purpose or to create an impact on a reader. In this section there is an overview of the sequence by which the complex task of writing is taught step by step through the year groups with a view to producing fluent and competent skilled writers by Year 6

At the heart of our approach is the model of the simple view of writing (Berninger et al, 2002), that greatly simplifies the complexities of writing. We appreciate that writing, unlike speech, requires an understanding:

- that talking, writing, thinking and reading are closely linked;
- of the limitations that working memory imposes upon the process and these require scaffolding, adapting and practice;

- that many specific elements require to be explicitly taught and mastered sequentially;
- that mastering writing requires deliberate practice with specific and focussed goals and effective feedback to refine and improve. It also includes modelling writing of a quality that is appropriate to the pupils being taught.
- that writing can be taught in English lessons but is a fundamental part of every curriculum area and organises and conveys the knowledge and content of each subject through the construction of each individual learner and their engagement with it.
- That there must be opportunities for independent application and freewriting:
  - As a gauge of where pupils are and to guide next steps.
  - To support pupil self-reflection and refinement over time,
  - To foster a sense of enjoyment in writing.

The transcriptional aspects of writing whereby graphemes are scribed into words, words arranged in sentences, sentences arranged to convey and express trains of thought requires intentional and deliberate practice through short burst writing with feedback. As students acquire automaticity through practising these routines this frees up memory space for compositional aspects and considerations over planning, reviewing and choices that better fit the intended purposes or that should engage and/ or cause an emotional impact on the reader.

Kellogg (2008) also represented the development of writing, on a developmental scale moving from writing that is simply 'knowledge-telling' through to writing that he describes as 'knowledge-transforming' with a focus on purpose to the highest level- 'knowledge-crafting' that is shaped to impact on an imagined audience. In our curriculum, much of the writing in Early Years and KS1 focusses upon this knowledge-telling aspect with an emphasis on ensuring that the transcriptional skills such as handwriting, getting content and ideas and knowledge down become practised, automatic and fluent and controlled. Legibility is key and teachers and adults that work with pupils must provide good and appropriate models as the children deliberately practise and acquire these routines. This means that we expect children to write a substantial amount and that over time this becomes refined with increasing closeness to the conventions and expectations of our presentation policy. Transcription will not become fluent unless it is deliberately and frequently practiced but practising errors or incorrectly formed letters will become habituated unless they are robustly tackled. Teacher close observation, feedback and intervention here is key.

During Year 2, with more increased fluency in transcription children are taught more explicitly to begin to proof-read and strive for conventional accuracy in their spelling. Across the curriculum pupils will be exposed to knowledge that they will be required to internalise and add to their long term memories. Part of this process comes from the act of writing that helps deepen these memories through organising information and writing sequenced and reasoned thoughts through the medium of the sentence. We teach children to consider and express how ideas are connected, or that one is more important than another or contradicts it through the introduction of grammatical conventions that shape and organise sentences, such as expansion and elaboration, subordination and coordination. This is through playing with grammatical features in Grammar games to orally practise them, modelling deliberate sentence constructions and types to expose pupils to them and opportunities for pupils to apply them in free writes as well as texts developed through the T4W process.

Across the 3 years of EYFS YR, Year 1 and Year 2 pupils will have learned to chorally recite, story map, immitate and innovate at least 30 stories by heart.

Writing is refined through lower key stage 2 with the introduction of further grammatical conventions and ways to shape and organise thinking and writing including deliberate practise to deepen proof-reading and editing so that ideas can be further refined and honed. Again grammatical features can be played with and explored through grammar games, explicitly applied through short burst writing, pulled out from reading of texts, put on toolkits and in Magpie books with the expectation that pupils will draw upon and apply these in their writing. The focus in these years is partularly on understanding the features and purpose of the different types of writing.

Across lower key stage 2, pupils will be developing a writer's cupboard of off the peg characters and character descriptions, descriptions linked to senses and specific vocabulary of specific places and linked times, both real and imagined, and their description in the style of the genre e.g. suspense. Writers will be taught to write with a theory of mind of an imagined reader to help inform their choices from their repetoire of grammatical and litearry devices, techniques and vocabulary. There will be a greater sophistication and control in the construction of their sentences to be able to write in a similar stles to the model texts to which they are exposed. Planning, proof-reading, editing and refining strategies will be deepened to ensure presentation and transcription are accurate.

In upper Key Stage 2, particularly in Year 6, there is more focus in reading on strategies that the writer has used to create an impact, literary devices and organisational devices that support, guide or create an effect for the reader and upon how to deploy these in pupils own writing. There is more focus on the character and character descriptions in fiction writing and on the analysis and use of effective literary technique and writerly devices. In non-fiction and across the curriculum, more advanced ways of taking notes, organising, combining and synthesing information are explored and modelled to enable each pupil to write drawing upon the knowledge and content of the wider and deeper curriculum they are exposed to. In maths, for example, reading of questions is important but written explanation of reasoning is also key and pupils need to be able to draw upon grammatical devices to help ensure that they are able to communicate their ideas and explanations effectively. Pupils will be expected to have planned, proof-read, edited and corrected to ensure work is accurate and presented with pride.

This model and this thinking underpins our approach to the development of writing in our pupils from their first developmental mark-making, through constructing a simple sentence, through telling what they know to transforming what they know through choices driven by the purpose, context and content of their writing through crafting writing with a consideration of audience and impact they want to have on their reader.

Fundamental concepts.

1. Free-writes:

The outcome of teaching writing is for pupils to be able to write independently and appropriate for the purpose, and as they get older, with a view on and for engaging their reader- the audience. This means that independent writing is at the centre of our approach to teaching writing because writing and learning to write is hard and it requires Self-Regulated Strategy Development (SRSD). Each week children will be given opportunities for Free-Writes (usually Fridays) to encourage application of skills and foster enjoyment of writing and expression.

Free-writes are an opportunities for teacher assessment and feedback and to shape planning and next steps of learning. In this sense, some free-writes will be similar to the T4W cold tasks that allow for assessment or invention writing that allow for judgements of progress. Free-writes also provide opportunities for teachers to model different sentence constructions, grammatical features and/ or other literary techniques. Sometimes free-writes may be tightly focussed or structured around a specific learning objective other times they will be much more open and provide opportunities for expression, exploration or sequenced and reasoned argument.

In YR and early KS1, young children will generally find the cognitive load too great to be given Free-writes that are completely open and may produce writing so incoherent that it is difficult to decipher let alone elicit a response. If children are to develop Self-Regulated Strategies to support independence in their writing they must first have explicit instruction in what these are in writing. In these years we need to equip children with the tools that will give them confidence as writers so that they can express themselves drawing upon the conventions of written text. This may include dictated passages that allow children to practise their spelling and punctuation or sets of sentences from given stems. We do want children to enjoy writing and use it as a means of self-expression, but practice of mechanics need not mean drudgery, students often gain a sense of pride and mastery from their learning. This mastery approach means that some students will hug closely models and stems that are given whilst others will stretch, extend, adapt and challenge themselves further.

Some Free-Writes from Y2 and into KS2 will continue to be more tightly structured around a specific writing strategy to provide opportunities, practice and reinforcement for pupils independent self-regulated application of them. As pupils move through KS2, alongside free-writes that start from a picture/ film/ text quote or artefact stimulus, free-writes may take the form of rewriting a given text from another character's viewpoint, using correctly punctuated direct speech or with a different historical or geographical setting, or a different tense or different genre e.g. a newspaper report of The Little Pigs. These provide opportunities for pupils to apply and practice knowledge and skills they have been taught elsewhere and may be in toolkits and to keep knowledge and skills fresh. As pupils are taught to proof-read, edit and improve with growing independence they also provide a place for this to be practised and so time must be given for these aspects.

Teachers need to be vigilant in these sessions because practising poor strategies can lead to incorrect habits for life. Errors need to be addressed and remedied.

Finally, free-writes are an important part of our approach to developing a love of writing in our pupils. We want our pupils to have independence and clarity of thought and to find and use their unique voice to share their thoughts, knowledge and expression. Free-writes help our pupils take notes, plan, organise their thinking, consider purpose and audience and then select from a repertoire of strategies, effects and devices appropriate to their purpose. Free-writes should be shared, read aloud and celebrated- they are personal and powerful and help our pupils express and embody our ASCENT values.

Free Write Opportunities

Free writes should be happening in class every week. For year 5 and 6, the focus should be improving stamina so you may consider longer sessions every two weeks.

They are distinct lessons that, where possible should be linked to the current topic or they should offer the opportunity to re-visit prior learning. We want children to have the opportunity to enjoy writing, as well as write for a range of purposes and genres. Through free writing, children have the opportunity to apply their skills and knowledge through a creative and enjoyable activity. It is important to allow the children planning time, using talk for writing strategies where appropriate, to help them develop their ideas and vocabulary.

Children set their own targets using sentence starter prompts if required.

(‘What I did well...’ and ‘Next time I need to...’)

Children are encouraged to refer to the class non-negotiables and make improvements using a purple pen.

This time is used to discuss, in pupil conferencing, next steps and children's targets.

The Learning intention will state clearly the text type, purpose and/ or audience for the writing.

Success criteria are co-constructed and guide children on what to include in their writing and should be displayed throughout the writing process. They may include reference to:

- Why are you writing? What do you want to communicate? and how will you know if you have done a good job?
- The purpose of the writing;
- Transcriptional and presentation features that ensure the text is well-presented and accurate and can be proof-read against;
- Grammatical devices including sentence types and/ or features that might typify and be features of this kind of writing;
- Literary effects, descriptive devices or lack thereof that could be deployed. In the service of this writing;
- For older pupils, devices to cause an impact on the reader

A stimulus task provides a discussion point to get the children talking about the prompt (this could be an object, picture or video). Additional pictures (or the original prompt) can be used to encourage planning based on vocabulary. Creating discussion and excitement around generating interesting vocabulary with the children. This is vital to encourage writers to use varied and well-chosen vocabulary. It also creates a vocabulary rich environment for all children.

2. Transcription and proof reading- spelling, handwriting and punctuation.

Shakespeare spelt his own name at least four different ways and AI Natural Language models produce grammatically correct 100% perfectly spelt written text faster than we can speak it. Notwithstanding these points, understandably, the National Curriculum requires that Primary pupils have a platform of accuracy in transcription aspects of writing as a root of the tree of the writing they will produce during their lifetime.

Young children need to be taught to correctly form letters, hold mark-making tools and connect graphemes as the starting point of words that are written. There is no benefit in letting young children develop their own way to hold mark-making tools, vigilant observation and persistent intervention and practise are the only ways to ensure the correct tripod grip is developed. This mantra needs to run through, with appropriate sensitivity, every occasion that a pupil holds a mark-making or writing tool from Reception to Year 3.

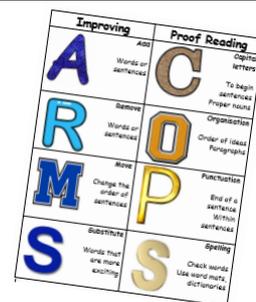

There is separate guidance on this aspect in the handwriting policy- an overview of the expectations for handwriting and presentation is included in the Year group grids below.

There is an unfolding developmental pathway to the development of spelling and children will be at different stages of it from Reception to approximately Year 3. This shows that young children recognise that their marks can stand for words and be read back, gradually begin to acquire familiar symbols to the graphemes to which they are exposed until they write words made up of all the graphemes they can hear and/ or vocalise even in their inner speech. The teaching of phonics and early spelling are closely intertwined. Alongside this children are taught that there are words (red words-we call them) that just have to be written in a certain way.

Gradually, usually during Year 2, children begin to acquire the visual acuity and memory, from words they have read and exposure, to begin to be able to recognise that, although phoneme-grapheme correspondence is a starting point, there are many irregular spellings of words in English that require to be spelt in the conventional way. This means that alongside the recognition that words may not be spelt correctly children require to be taught a way of highlighting these words so they can be returned to through proof-reading and checking and correcting for accuracy. Ultimately, this will result in increased initial accuracy of correctly spelt words, a range of strategies for proof reading, spell-checking and synonym enhanced editing and proof reading for features of grammatical accuracy, punctuation and cohesion that will blend seamlessly into the processes used by word-processors and digital text. This means that our writers, when they are adults, may have produced text produced by prompting Natural Language AI models but that they will understand and be able to make informed decisions about how they may further tweak this through closely-reading, editing or adapting the text.

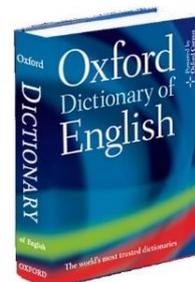

The sequence below is a recommended pathway through the stages of this:

	Transcription- Developmental to Conventional Spelling
YR	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>if a child has no graphemes they are taught to represent a word with a ----- line (a wiggly line)</li> <li>As they acquire symbol like shapes and representations this will feature within the line: ---^&amp;---@ k-----s .</li> <li>As they are taught and can write graphemes of phonemes they can hear they represent these and use a line for those they do not: a c---on a mat</li> <li>They will pick up cvc sounds and graphemes and red words and this will build upon this: acat sat on a mat the mat woz p-p- .</li> </ol>

Resources to aid independence.

- Clearly shared Learning intention
- Success criteria or where appropriate establish with your class a set of non-negotiables for writing to inform the success criteria. (These should reflect the expectations of the English curriculum and focus on previous learning.)
- Writing Walls - to include audience, purpose, vocabulary, spelling, grammar, toolkit, high quality examples
- Word and sound mats, project bookmarks
- Dictionaries and Thesauruses available
- Peer and self-assessment
- Editing using purple pens
- Talk partners.

3. Sentences are the building blocks of all writing.

Although children need to be confident to write at length and this is initially valued. As children move the school we expect quality of writing to become more valued than quantity. This is because writers will be able to make more conscious choices and express their thoughts, communicate ideas and/ or communicate with more conscious and competent control. This will only come through if children are taught to compose and write a sentence. Even for older pupils, sentence level comp are miniature compositions that may require them to explain, expand, rephrase, paraphrase or summarise.

3.1 How we teach sentence structures.

Most English and Writing lessons will start with an active warm up. In Maths lessons this part of the lesson is called a Power Up in English Lessons it is called a Jumpstart. Jumpstarts do not need a specific Learning Intention to be written in the writing book for every lesson as they are frequently active, oral, involve the whole class and brief (5/10 mins max). They use play-based learning to allow all pupils to explore, experiment and try-out different grammatical structures and devices.

The main categories of games are:

Investigating and Defining	Looking at texts for certain word classes or types of sentences. What is their function?
Imitation	Identifying key patterns that will be needed and inventing further sentences that use the same [pattern].
Magpieing and collecting	Gathering banks of words, phrases and sentence patterns. In KS1 this might be on large pieces of paper with Post-It notes and groups rotating around tables. In KS2 words might go in Magpie Books.Improving
Improving	Strengthening the choice of words, the effect of the sentences and the way in which text coheres. Teaching proof reading.
Correcting	Making sentences accurate. Teaching proof reading.
Manipulating and joining.	Learning how to alter sentence order to create different effects as well as learning how to link and combine sentences and paragraphs
Comparing	Comparing word choice, sentences and paragraphs in order to consider the effect of differing word choices, sentence constructions and linkage.
Cloze procedure	Filling in gaps in sentences with words or gaps in texts with sentences.
Discussing and using	Constant discussion of words, sentences and texts and the relationship between language construction and the impact on the reader.

Teachers should refer to the JumpStart resources in the PPA room. There are also some resources here:

<https://www.topmarks.co.uk/english-games/7-11-years/spelling-and-grammar>

However, children should not be sitting being EDU-tained by a teacher at the front during the JumpStart part of the lesson, the emphasis should be on active. If you find other resources please let us all know and watch American spellings!

Having said that a LI is not always necessary for this part of the lesson, the focus of the learning will be displayed to the class and likely be linked to an overarching theme associated with that unit that will have a reference on the Working Wall so will be linked to a LI. The teacher may summarise key points arising out of the learning on a flipchart toolkit that can be displayed and referred to with an expectation that it is drawn upon by pupils. When these toolkits are complete it may be appropriate for pupils in KS2 to copy and summarise key points into their writing books for future reference. Where these are written they can be termed Title Toolkit rather than requiring a LI slip.

There are also JumpStart Drama, Literacy and Story-Making Games and the expectation is that most writing lessons will begin with an active jumpstart.

In addition, each year group will introduce a range of sentence structures using model sentence stems, connectives and organisational structures as indicated in the sentence level work, grammar work and the Alan Pete sentence structures indicated on the back of the year group plan in Appendix 2 and from the NC statutory appendices. These will be modelled and practised during short burst writing, woven into model texts and applied during free-writes. Currently highlighted and practised sentence structures should also be displayed on the Working Wall.

For proofreading and editing from Year 2 onwards children may also have the prompt of an editing bookmark. Using COPS and ARMS as acronyms for supporting this process.

4. Presentation

When working in integrated curriculum books, the long date should be written on the in the learning intention grid, at the start of each day's learning. Underneath this should be the Learning Objective. All written work should follow the schools handwriting policy and demonstrate the progression in cursive handwriting.

Teacher modelled writing, whether for display, modelled class writing or in written feedback must always be of a good standard and appropriate to support the pupils that are reading it. Teacher modelled handwriting and presentation is one of the most powerful influences on pupil presentation and handwriting. The impact of this should be fully understood by all staff and every effort made to uphold a standard of consistency for the pupils from YR -Y4. In upper Key Stage 2 this needs to be maintained but there can be more open discussion about types of presentation for different audiences and purposes.

The expectation is that handwriting, presentation and proof-reading and editing strategies are the same across all subjects. The English lessons, specifically writing, are where these techniques are taught but the writing that occurs in every subject from Maths, to Art, to Science to RE are the places where these skills are applied and indeed practised. This is where the organisation of Primary, where the Class Teacher usually teaches both writing and other National Curriculum subjects provides a real strength to ensure that this consistency is secured. Much subject specific vocabulary and spelling is detailed elsewhere but the strategies for its use when applied in writing in that subject will have been learned during writing lessons. This is particularly important for presentation, handwriting, note-taking, the use of stem sentences and proof-reading and editing to secure accurate spelling and punctuation.

5. Vocabulary

We know from research that the size of a child's vocabulary is the best predictor of success on future tests. We also know that a good understanding of a wide range of vocabulary supports success across the whole national curriculum.

We recognise the importance of helping children develop both the ability to understand spoken and written language, acquiring a control of language that enables them to express their ideas and feelings clearly. A key aspect of a child's language development is the growth of their vocabulary – the words they can understand and the words they use to communicate. When children write, a wider vocabulary gives them a rich palette with which to express their ideas, choosing a word to communicate with elegance and precision. Through our integrated Curriculum and range of writing strategies, as described in this document, we are able to further children's language development organically and through direct teaching.

As a school we further this through the use of our working walls. Where we identify and develop, with the children, key vocabulary, WOW words and supper sentences.

6. How we teach writing

It is important to show ourselves as a writer, demonstrating the different stages of the writing process. Young writers need to both observe knowledgeable writers at work and participate in writing in authentic and well-supported ways. Your writing lessons will allow you to both model and actively engage children in the writing processes, prior to them embarking on constructing their own writing.

Writing can be difficult and time consuming for many children, but like any complex job, writing is easier if you have the right tools. Writing strategies are the tools writers use to do their work. At Hill View we use a variety of strategies which may include Talk 4 Writing, Reading Reconsidered and Free Writing opportunities.

Writing process could look like...

1. Genre toolkit
2. Planning
3. Success criteria for task
4. Shared drafts showing editing process ( could be deliberate mistakes)
5. Examples of fully modelled pieces of writing

Shared writing is a good opportunity to model the writing process, including how to integrate your current grammar objectives and to show how we self-edit as we are writing.

Handwriting on a flip chart is more effective than typing- and it can go straight up on display!

7. Features of a Writing Lesson

There is no such thing as a definitive writing lesson structure as it will depend on the focus, the part of the writing process reached in the T4W cycle and other factors.

It is likely that a Writing lesson will have some or all of the following features:

- Begin with a JumpStart
- Share specific LI within an overarching LI and co-construct SC with pupils and/ or refer to / add to relevant displayed toolkit.
- Feature some Teacher modelling of writing.
- Ensure every lesson has some short-burst or extended writing.
- (If appropriate have time for proof-reading & editing)
- Summarise with a plenary.

A typical KS2 lesson may have some or several of the features below within the lesson.

Active/ short/ Fun	Adult-led/ Focussed	Adult-Led/ Pupil application	And/ or	Independent application	Pupil-led/ Mobile teacher	Adult-led

8. Talk for writing progression guidance.

There are extensive detailed videos and resources to support teachers new to the T4W approach here:

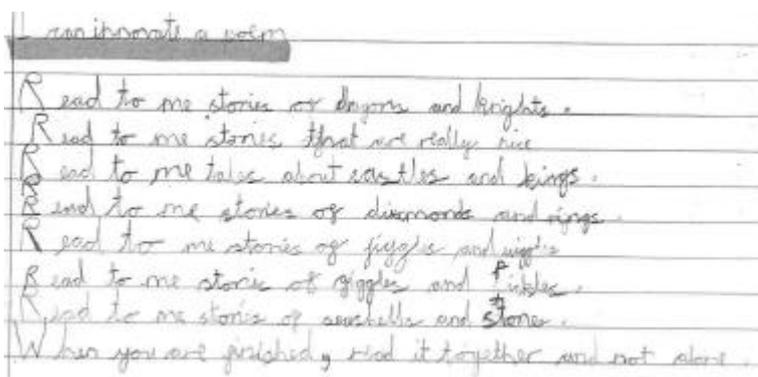

<https://www.talk4writing.com/about>

8.1 Imitation : https://www.youtube.com/embed/p\_NI2jD-5Es

Talk the text, supported visually by text maps and acting out/role play/drama. Help children internalise the pattern of the language required. In this way the children hear the text, say it for themselves and enjoy it before seeing it written down. Once they have internalised the language of the text, they are in a position to read the text and start to think about the key ingredients that help to make it work.

Understanding the structure of the text can be easier if you use the boxing-up technique and then help the children to analyse the features that have helped to make the text work. Then they can imitate (re-write) the text.

8.1a Immersing and Sharing: Sharing WAGOLL's at this stage is vital. This could be done by reading the text that is the focus or reading a range of texts that focus around the same genre or text type and help unpick. This could be when writing traditional tales children can be immersed in reading and experience a number of tales and unpicking the features etc. Be sure to include your WAGOLL, ideas, 'wow' words and success criteria on your learning wall, in font large enough for pupils to see. Encourage pupils to contribute to/engage with the learning wall as part of the writing process.

- Making good use of word and sentence games/drama activities designed to generate ideas and excitement.
- brainstorming ideas for writing
- helping the students select a writing focus from a suite of possibilities
- modelling how initial ideas for writing might be noted (as pictures, mind maps, notes, etc.)
- jointly listing the key parts of the text. "As a class, let's list as dot points what we need to include in this piece of writing."
- thinking about the genre or text type that might be appropriate for different writing focuses
- talking to peers to generate ideas.

8.2 Innovation: <https://www.youtube.com/embed/WM5eK5A-UF8>

https://www.youtube.com/embed/vY\_oMIWhShk

An opportunity to adapt text maps, Story Mountains or boxing up. Demonstrate how to use grammar features and investigate in shared writing. Once the children have internalised the text, they are then ready to start innovating on the pattern of the text. This could begin with more advanced activities to warm up the key words and phrases of the type of text focused on so the children can magpie ideas and focus on grammar. Younger children and less confident writers can alter their text maps and orally rehearse what they want to say, creating their own version. The key activity in this stage is shared writing, helping the children to write their own by "doing one together" first. This could begin with using a boxed-up grid (innovating on the exemplar plan) to show how to plan the text and then turning the plan into writing. This allows the children to see how you can innovate on the exemplar text and select words and phrases that really work.

8.2a. Planning / Drafting / Short burst writing: "Getting started" on a piece of writing can be a challenge for many students, so the teacher's role in supporting students at this planning stage might involve students needing support for recording ideas in an initial draft. Teacher modelling or joint text construction can be very supportive for students at this point. This might involve:

- modelling how to convert ideas or speech to written text. So, the teacher engaging in a 'think-aloud protocol' might be of benefit, such as, "I need to remember that I am writing this for people who were not there when the events happened. So, I'll need to include information like where the action took place and who was there. Let's see—how will I start ..."
- enlisting student support to collaboratively construct a text (or sections of a text). "Who has a suggestion for what important details we need to add here?"
- demonstrating risk taking strategies in undertaking ambitious writing. "I'm not sure how to spell extrovert—but it's a perfect word to use here. I'll have a go at it, underline it and check the spelling later. I need to get my ideas down first."
- making connections from texts read to those being drafted. "Remember how E.B. White started Charlotte's Web with dialogue? Why don't you try that in your narratives?"
- explicitly drawing attention to linguistic structures and features of different text types. "Remember, this is a recount. It happened in the past, so we need to use past tense verbs."

8.3 Independent/ Application

This stage will continue to focus on the next steps needed to support progress so the children can become independent speakers and writers of this type of text. Perhaps some more examples of the text are compared and followed by more shared writing on a related topic and then the children can have a go themselves on a related topic of their own choosing. This process also helps the children internalise the toolkit for such writing so that it becomes a practical flexible toolkit in the head rather than a list to be looked at and blindly followed.

8.3a. Editing / Proofreading/redrafting: As individuals, with classroom peers and with the teacher (incidentally or at a more formal conference), students need to be actively rereading over written drafts with a focus on meaning and form. Important considerations here are whether the text makes sense, ideas are presented clearly and sequentially. Actions might include:

- expanding noun groups to provide more detail
- removing redundant or unimportant information to make the piece clearer
- focusing on more precise, technical language word choice

- using connectives to improve transitions between paragraphs.

Students edit their texts focusing on conventions (spelling and punctuation) to ensure they are incorporated correctly and in ways that will assist the reader. The teacher’s role in supporting students to edit their writing might be:

- ensuring that if the writer is mindful of the reader at all times, making visible the proofreading strategies writers need to enact. “I’m not sure about my spelling of that word extrovert. Let me say it slowly in syllables: ex-tro-vert. What sounds do I hear? How might I record them? Does it look right? I better check using a dictionary or spell check”
- orchestrating a peer-review process. “When you share your written pieces with each other, always begin with positive feedback. Two stars and a wish is a good approach—offer two compliments, then a constructive suggestion”
- modelling word substitution. “Instead of saying ‘We got bored’, what could we write? What’s a better word than got? ‘We became ... what ... disinterested ...”

8.3b. Publishing: The final form of a written piece might be a digital publication, a paper-based text, an audio-recording or podcast, among many options. Rich models of published texts serve as exemplar texts that students might strive to emulate. So, the teacher’s role here can be around, you may not publish at every stage of writing:

- modelling and deconstructing existing texts as mentor texts for students: these might be web pages, picture books, graphic novels, podcasts, pamphlets, information texts, etc.
- supporting students’ publishing by recognising different strengths and talents in the classroom: the students who have an excellent eye for layout.
- encouraging students to offer feedback on published pieces of classroom writing. This can include students reflecting on their own successes. “Was there something you did with this publication that you’d never done before?”
- celebrating successes and the mastery of new skills around text creation. This can take the form of special classroom celebrations (as mentioned earlier) but can also take the form of ongoing feedback. “Can I just share some really amazing things I’m noticing as you are all working away on your publications?”

8.4: INVENTION/ Writing Across the Curriculum

8.4a: Free-writes: The weekly Free Writes provide an opportunity for pupils to apply the learning they have been doing in their writing lessons to an invented text or in response to a stimulus. Free writes are likely to have some features modelled or arise after some short burst practice of specific sentence types, grammatical features or literary features. These may be highlighted in the co-constructed Success Criteria as a Toolkit from which to draw to gauge success.

8.4b: Writing Across the Curriculum.

From the writing that comprises the reasoning in maths books, to the writing up of scientific experiments to descriptive and factual historical and geographical knowledge and interpretation, alongside notes, transformation tasks and knowledge re-telling tasks- the wider curriculum provides the subject content for writing to be applied to share thinking, reflect, evaluate, explain and persuade. As such pupils should draw upon knowledge and skills learned in writing lessons and apply these to their writing across the curriculum. This should include, presentation, handwriting, spelling, proof-reading and editing and the application of learned grammatical features and sentence types to support the purpose and audience for which they are writing in that subject.

9. Planning

At the beginning of a unit of writing, the Year Group Team should use the T4W Visual Planner at Appendix 1 to sketch out the journey through the T4W phases required to cover the Anchor Text, the teaching objectives from the Year Group spread in Appendix 2 and the NC appendices. This should be balanced with assessment information arising out the KPI Ready 2 Progress information to ensure that action is taken to teach, reteach and/ or intervene to secure the necessary depth of learning for the pupils in the cohort.

This information can be mapped onto the visual planner that will then provide a visual overview of the writing journey through that unit that can be mapped elsewhere in more detail onto the appropriate planning format.

When planning content for the Writing Wall should be considered to ensure consistency across the Year Group, key written outcomes, tasks, activities and jumpStarts should be planned for the Year Group and the key elements mentioned in the example plan in Section 7 should be identified. It helps if there has been an assessment task during a Free Write prior to commencing this module (sometimes called a cold task)- marked with a blue box the Visual Planner to help inform assessment for learning decisions prior to planning. It also helps if there is a shared model text (including a shared text map) – a WAGOLL (What a good One Looks Like) marked with the yellow box as the pupils work their way through the phases to produce an agreed outcome- marked with the red box (Sometimes called the Hot Task)

Teachers in the Year Group are encouraged to share and reflect upon the implementation of lessons each day, where possible, to allow them to tweak content and learning to match the emerging needs of their class whilst staying broadly on the same path, encountering similar key tasks and working toward a similar outcome.

10. Working Walls

What is a Working Wall? It is the public display of the learning process and evolves as each day progresses. It is not static. It can increase effective learning and teaching. The purpose of the working wall is to support children's independent writing.'

Why use them?

- Children have ownership of them and so use them more.
- It encourages independence.
- Children are more engaged in their learning.
- Children have a better understanding of expectations.
- What will a working wall include?
- The purpose of why you're writing. (see ideas on handout)
- The audience (who is your writing for)
- Key vocabulary (project words / words they need to know and use)
- Punctuation / grammar focusses for a sequence of lessons.
- Wow words (additional vocabulary that the children are attempting or you are introducing when modelling)
- Modelled sentences / exceptional sentences children have used.
- Additional resources such as relevant word mats could also be displayed here

Writing working wall guidance

- Laminated posters should be displayed, and this is a space to identify...Audience, Purpose, Genre, Spelling, Project vocabulary, Grammar and Punctuation so you can complete them with the children and change them as you go.
- Spellings for year group and previous year groups displayed in some way and in a format (flashcards/word mats) easily accessed by the children. This could be in reachable distance and could be agreed with the children.
- Dictionaries and thesauruses should be available to all children.
- Toolkit displayed.
- Some opportunities for children to be interactive e.g. post it notes to add vocab or have vocab on that they can take away and use.
- Displays must be used as working walls- they should reflect the writing process as you teach it (refer to photos below and photos in folder); examples of writing- relevant to genre showing WAGOLL, shared writing, good examples of children's writing, text maps, pictures.

11. Assessing Writing

11.1 Assessment Free-writes or 'Cold & Hot Tasks'

These are useful to gather a rounded picture of what to be included in the model text (WAGOLL) and story map for a new unit prior to the unit commencing. They do not require deep marking but a quick glance through the books will highlight common themes that need to be taught, addressed, practised and/or reinforced.

11.2 Pupil Conferencing

Teacher feedback is one of the most powerful techniques for causing change and progress in pupil writing. We have moved beyond the times of extensive deep written and marked feedback. Most feedback will be live and can be done when pupils are engaged in independent writing.

- During the week teachers will carry out pupil conferencing to discuss the pupils writing and next steps, use the learning walls as a basis for this discussion. Teachers may focus on specific children each week to ensure all children have a 1;1 conferencing opportunity to reflect on their writing, review and set targets at least twice a term.
- Encourage children to reflect on their written work with regards to the writing learning wall, letting them be a part of the discussion too.

11.3 Evidence Gathering Grids and Success Criteria

We have updated the Evidence Gathering Grids (EGGs) for the new academic year. These do no need to be stuck into the front of each child's book. These key performance indicators are the main sources for Teacher Assessment for writing and some Year Groups e.g. Y6 may wish to use them for moderation or intervention purposes outside of the digital profile in Otrack.

As these indicators provide the key statements to indicate performance at the Age-Related Expectations in that Year Group they provide a guide to steer to the teaching of the content that is derived from the double-page spreads in the next section and the appropriate NC appendices.

- Share or where appropriate establish with your class a clear success criteria for writing, to support the children through the writing process.
- Share the assessment criteria that is the focus for the current unit with reference to it on the Writing Wall. This should be done at the beginning of a week / English unit of work and outline (highlight) which will be the focus for that week / unit / day. This could easily be displayed on the front page of a SMART. The small steps to achieving the overarching Learning Intention form the daily Lis as pupils step through parts of the process. On occasion, a Learning Intention may run over several days but the co-constructed Success Criteria may change. Children will then be able to easily refer to whether they have met the objective or still need to work on it.
- Evidence Gathering Grids are to be completed by the teacher and where possible, with the children, evidenced by noting down the date of the written work in books. Children can independently date an objective they feel they have successfully met - children need to prove it! This will improve the children's knowledge of what they are learning about in English and the vocabulary that they will use.
- Children, with adult support if needed, will set themselves a target to work towards. This will either be recorded alongside a piece of work or on their Evidence Gathering Grid sheet.

11.4 The Ready to Progress Criteria for Writing

Writing has been identified as an area that requires further improvement both at Key Stage 1 and into Key Stage 2. In order to ensure that the various aspects of composition, Grammar and Punctuation and Transcription are being secured in pupils as they progress through each year group and across the phases the Evidence Gathering KPIs from the grids have been entered into the Writing formative descriptors in OTrack (Sonar). We require teachers to make a formative teacher assessment

Available Codes

COLOUR	DESCRIPTION
Grey	Not taught or pupil was absent
Red	Taught, but not understood
Yellow	Taught and showing signs of understanding
Green	Taught and understood
Purple	Taught and working at greater depth against these KPIs that we are terming the Ready to Progress criteria in Writing. This will need to be done at least once per term and will be analysed as part of the Termly data analysis.

There is no Writing Test, in the way there is for Reading (PIRA) and (PUMA) Maths. The Grammar Test (GAPS) assesses performance and knowledge of grammar and punctuation in a test so. A more robust form of assessment is now required. The bulk fill option will save time, and this is important and replaces the requirement to deep mark with the frequency that was previously required.

The expectation is that by the Summer Term children will be green in all the relevant criteria, having been taught and understood the KPI R2P criteria in Writing. Teachers and Year Leaders will be expected to prioritise and intervene to address children coded as red. Note: It is OK to have children coded as yellow during the autumn and Spring Term, but the expectation is that all are green by the end of the summer term. This is a Mastery approach, and it is why the assessment criteria are listed before the taught content in the appendix below as they should guide teacher planning, provision and pupil practice and application. Some SEND pupils may require some adaptations to realise this performance and this is appropriate and should be noted but the bottom line is that this coding reflects independent performance.

Year Leaders will be questioned on this new formative data and steps they are taking to address pupils coded grey and red in Autumn and Spring and pupils not coded green in the Summer.

11.5 Grammar, Punctuations and Spellings (GAPS test)

This formative Termly Assessment Test provides a useful overview in these three areas. Once the test has been taken the Scaled Score needs to be entered in OTrack/ Sonar and provides information such as writing age and an indication of GPS knowledge that can be used to identify areas for teaching. Pupils tend to better in this assessment but struggle to apply this with independence to their writing, so it is useful to triangulate between GAPS and Formative data for Writing using the Triangulation report.

11.6 Comparative Judgement

This annual assessment will place all the writing sampled in rank order against a much larger data set. This will be the second year that Comparative Judgement has been sampled for some year groups and the third for others. The data Comparative Judgement provides can be used to further triangulated Teacher Assessment judgements both within the cohort and against the large National Database. The CJ data gives a Writing Age that can be compared to that within the GAPS and questions can be asked of the application of the KPIR2P criteria in the sampled writing compared again to the Teacher Assessment. If a pupil is ranked very differently to the ongoing Teacher Assessment data then this provides a basis for further questioning and exploration and also forms an external calibration of judgements.

11.7 Moderation

Each half term there is an expectation that one Year Group meeting includes some moderation of writing. Teachers from the year group should bring 2/3 samples of pupil writing to the meeting to be moderated by the Year Group team. The evidence of these agreed moderations should be kept by the year leader. Teachers are encouraged to take along pupils that they want to check their judgements and also use the group to discuss next steps with regard intervention and action to address a lack of progress or a need to further challenge.

Appendix 2: Knowledge and Skills progression in Writing.

The following section outlines the key skills and knowledge that should be covered.

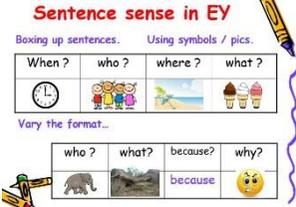

1. Year Leaders are expected to keep a copy of the double page spread in the Writing folder for their year group.
2. The teacher responsible for the planning of a block of writing should select Learning Intentions, Success Criteria and Assessment criteria from this planning sheet.
3. As areas are taught they should be highlighted yellow. If an area is completed it should be highlighted Green.

The Writing Team and/ or English Lead may use this information to support monitoring.

		Write for real purposes and audiences, demonstrating understanding of the main features of different forms of writing. Write using a rich and varied vocabulary. In narrative create simple settings, characters and plot. Begin to use direct speech within narratives. Use paragraphs as a way of grouping related material.	Choose language to suit the purpose and audience: Write a range of sentences with more than one clause by using a wider range of conjunctions (when, before, after, while, so because, although). Add detail and precision through expanding noun phrases using pre-modification (secure and extend from Year 2). Use present and past tense correctly, including use of the present perfect instead of the simple past. Express time, place, cause and enhance cohesion using adverbs (soon, therefore, finally) and prepositions, including prepositional phrases (during the night, before breakfast, because of the rain). Demarcate sentences accurately throughout using capital letters, end punctuation and commas in lists (secure from Year 2). Use inverted commas to punctuate direct speech. Use apostrophes for contraction and singular possession correctly (secure from Year 2).		Spell correctly words that have been previously taught, including... common exception words from KS1; previously taught homophones; those with known prefixes and suffixes. Use and spell correctly many words from the Year 3 / Year 4 spelling list. Use phonic knowledge and morphology to make plausible attempts at spelling unknown words, spelling some correctly. Evaluate the effectiveness of writing and suggest improvements. Proofread for spelling and punctuation (see Y3 age-related expectations for accuracy). Handwriting- Use joined up writing consistently and independently.

stage	Sentence type	Info and examples	Teaching points / terminology
Y2/3	explicitly teach writing 4 sentence types: Command, statement, exclamation and question....	Statement: We are going to the beach today. Command: Go to your room! Question: What are you going to do? Exclamation: (nb for Y2 SATs start with How or What). How ridiculous!	Full stop question mark  exclamation mark
	Noun, which, who, where (intro in Y2)	Use commas to embed a clause in a sentence, adding extra information, starting the clause with which, who or where. nb Embedded clauses are subordinate clauses – this part can be omitted and the sentence will still make sense. They are enclosed by commas.e.g. Snakes, which scare me, are not always poisonous. My pet dog, who only has 3 legs, loves to chase seagulls.	embedded clause – ‘drop in’  introduce idea of main clause / subordinate clause
	Verb, person	Starts with a verb to give it more importance. The verb is followed by a comma and then a name / pronoun (he, she, they, it) followed by the rest of the sentence.  e.g. Tiptoeing, Jack tried to sneak past the giant’s snoring body.	teach choosing powerful verbs to add emphasis. - Choose nouns / pronouns - appropriately to make clear - varying sentence starters double ly ending	The sentence must end with two adverbs, which add detail to, and describe how the verb within the sentence is being carried out. e.g. They laughed loudly and shrilly.	adverbs of manner
Y3/4	De:De (description: details)	A compound sentence in which two independent clauses are separated by a colon. First clause is descriptive and the second clause adds further details. The colon links – signalling that the second clause will expand on the first.e.g. Snails are slow: they take hours to travel the shortest of distances.	colon  independent clause / main clause
	Ad, same ad sentences	Two identical adjectives, one repeated shortly after the other. First opens the clause and the second comes immediately after the comma.e.g. He was a fast runner, fast because he needed to be.	noun phrases expanded by the addition of modifying adjectives (e.g. the teacher - the strict maths teacher etc)
	All the Ws	Short sentence (introduce rhetorical questions), starting with the following W words: Who? What? When? Where? Why? Would? Was? Will? What if? e.g. Would there ever be another opportunity like this one? Who would take over his role now?	rhetorical questions
	FANBOYS sentence	Using a co-ordinating conjunction: for, and, nor, but, or, yet, so. Two independent clauses, the first part of the sentence ends with a comma, and the second begins with these conjunctions. e.g. He was a friendly man, but he could become nasty.	Subordination (when, if, that, because) and co-ordination (FANBOYS)
	Many questions	Start with a question and a question mark, followed by further words or phrases which pose linked, additional questions (ending with a ?). n.b. the additional phrases do not need capitals. e.g. Where was the treasure? the diamonds? the rubies? the riches? e.g. What if she was lost? trapped? captured? or murdered?	writing for effect
	ing, ed	The verb ending ‘ing’ is followed by a location of the action, and then a comma. The second part of the sentence starts with a name or pronoun. It then moves from present to past tense, and indicates a pivotal incident.e.g. Dancing in the studio, he watched in the mirror as a ghost appeared.	Preposition – links a following noun or pronoun to some other word in the sentence (unlike conjunctions, they cannot link clauses) Walking in the bush, she stopped at the sight of a crocodile facing her.’ She waved to her mother and watched her as she disappeared in the fog at the bottom of the street.’

Speak audibly and fluently with an increasing command of Standard English

stage	Sentence type	Info and examples	Teaching points / terminology
3 and Year 4	De:De (description: details)	A compound sentence in which two independent clauses are separated by a colon. First clause is descriptive and the second clause adds further details. The colon links – signalling that the second clause will expand on the first. e.g. Snails are slow: they take hours to travel the shortest of distances.	colon  independent clause / main clause
	Ad, same ad sentences	Two identical adjectives, one repeated shortly after the other. First opens the clause and the second comes immediately after the comma. e.g. He was a fast runner, fast because he needed to be.	noun phrases expanded by the addition of modifying adjectives (e.g. the teacher - the strict maths teacher etc)
	All the Ws	Short sentence (introduce rhetorical questions), starting with the following W words: Who? What? When? Where? Why? Would? Was? Will? What if? e.g. Would there ever be another opportunity like this one? Who would take over his role now?	rhetorical questions
	FANBOYS sentence	Using a co-ordinating conjunction: for, and, nor, but, or, yet, so. Two independent clauses, the first part of the sentence ends with a comma, and the second begins with these conjunctions. e.g. He was a friendly man, but he could become nasty.	Subordination (when, if, that, because) and  co-ordination (FANBOYS)
	Many questions	Start with a question and a question mark, followed by further words or phrases which pose linked, additional questions (ending with a ?). n.b. the additional phrases do not need capitals. e.g. Where was the treasure? the diamonds? the rubies? the riches? / e.g. What if she was lost? trapped? captured? or murdered?	writing for effect
	ing, ed	he verb ending 'ing' is followed by a location of the action, and then a comma. The second part of the sentence starts with a name or pronoun. It then moves from present to past tense, and indicates a pivotal incident. e.g. Dancing in the studio, he watched in the mirror as a ghost appeared.	Preposition – links a following noun or pronoun to some other word in the sentence (unlike conjunctions, they cannot link clauses) 'Walking in the bush, she stopped at the sight of a crocodile facing her.' 'She waved to her mother and watched her as she disappeared in the fog at the bottom of the street.'

Year 5 and Year 6	Outside: Inside sentences	Two related sentences (first tells us what a character is supposedly thinking, second, related sentence, which is always in brackets, lets the reader know the character's true INNER feelings)  Bracketed sentence shows viewpoint.  Possible words for beginning second sentence: However...In truth...Secretly...Happy/sad...Brave/terrified etc  e.g. She told the little girl not to be so naughty. (Inside, however, she was secretly amused by what she had done.)	Choosing nouns and pronouns (me, him, he himself, his etc) appropriately for clarity and cohesion  Viewpoint Parenthesis
	Some; others sentences	Compound sentences beginning with the word some and have a semi-colon instead of a conjunction separating the latter half of the sentence  e.g. Some people love football; others just can't stand it	Teach use of the semi-colon, colon and dash to mark the boundary between independent clauses
	Personification of weather sentences	An element of the weather is given a human attribute.  When grasped, introduce an adverb  e.g. The rain wept down his window - The rain wept pitifully down his window.  e.g. The waves battered the little boat	Determiner – stands before any noun if necessary to enable the sentence to make sense (the, a, this, my, any)  The rain wept down his window.'
	3 bad – (dash) question	Can also be 3 good. Sentence starts with 3 (often negative – often adjective) words. First and second followed by commas. Third followed by a dash, then a question which relates to the negative adjectives.  e.g. Thirst, heatstroke, exhaustion – which would kill him first?  e.g. Generosity, compassion, kindness – which was Miss Honey's finest quality?	Using dashes (progression from list sentence).  Writing for impact and effect
	P.C. sentences (paired conjunctions)	When some words need a second word in order to make sense  e.g. neither nor – Neither money nor gifts could make him go back to the haunted hut.  e.g. both and - It was both creepy and unpleasant for him to work there.	conjunctions

Year 5 and Year 6	Irony Sentences	Deliberately overstates how good or bad something is (often signalling by quote marks). The overstated word is then shown to be false, through the remainder of the sentence.  e.g. Our 'luxury' hotel turned out to be a farm outbuilding, complete with chickens!  e.g. As the sun rose, our advertised 'beautiful view' revealed itself to be a scrapyard and a rubbish tip.		useful when writing letters of complaint.  collect superlatives to use as the overstated word.
	Imagine 3 examples	Begin with the word 'imagine', then describe three parts of something (often times of places). The first two parts are separated by commas and the third with a colon. Then explain that there is such a place / thing.  e.g. Imagine a place where the sun always shines, where wars never happen, where no-one ever dies: on Andromeda 5, there is such a planet.		Modal verb – used to express degrees of certainty / ability / obligation (will, could, can, could, may, might, shall, should, must, ought) Imagine a time where everyone could help each other, when life might be simpler etc....
	Active and passive sentences	Ensure children understand the difference.  e.g. The school arranged a visit – active  e.g. A visit was arranged by the school – passive		subject and object of the sentence
	Tell: (colon) show 3 examples	Two part sentence. First part tells the reader a fact or opinion. This is followed by a colon. After the colon a list of 3 examples follows. As this is a phrase list (not single words), semi-colons are used to separate the items.  e.g. He was feeling relaxed: shoes off; shirt undone; lying on the sofa.		colon  semi-colon
	When _; when _; when _; then _.	Ends with a statement, which is preceded by 3 occurrences, which, when combined, predict the final statement.  e.g. When tumultuous thunder shakes the ground; when blinding lightning tears the sky; when storm clouds block every ray of hopeful light; then the beast will awaken.		Writing for effect: great striking paragraph or opening.  semi-colon in a list
